

CoronaVirus / Covid19 Statement

In the current climate, which is obviously changing by the hour and the fact that every country seems to be issuing their own guidance in relation to the particular stage they're at with this pandemic, we've taken the decision not to pressure our supply partners into assuring us of continuity of supply.

We don't feel it fair and reasonable to ask them to commit to ensuring supply lines remain fluid, when essentially they have little or no control over what respective government directives dictate.

We're also conscious that many businesses are now operating with reduced staffing levels and as such, we don't feel adding pressure to these limited resources is the appropriate thing to do.

We hope you understand our position, and this is the only statement we'll be making in regard to the current global emergency. We're obviously in unprecedented times and hopefully if everybody adopts the same policy, we can all work through this with the appropriate levels of reason and sensitivity.

It goes without saying that giving as much notice as possible including considering call off orders, would be a prudent way forward and we're happy to work with all customers and suppliers to put these measures in place.
